They've journey'd home to God. No thunder-cloud of battle, Nor cannon's deadly roar, May break that rest at Elmwood, They sleep forever more: Yes, children, maids and mothers Strew your floral offerings fair; These silent dead were prothers, For you, they're sleeping there.

Their spotless banner gleamath, No more beneath the sky; Its starry cross bath faded, And they, all lowly, He-Still may ye come all quiet, Ou this memorial day, Your chaplet, and the laurel leaf, Upon each mound to lay.

How sweet they slumbering lie Beneath the leafy branches, The fair and op, n sky-Tis meet to do them homage, And wreathe the hillocks there! Our noble ones, and fair!
